FIREFIGHTER SAFETY

PREPARATION:

Much of our wildland fire training is directed towards avoiding being entrapped or overrun by fire. Given the many variables in firefighting operations and factors influencing fire behavior, however, situations may arise that force firefighters to deploy their fire shelters in a last resort effort to save their lives. Since firefighters typically work together as crews, most shelter deployments will be done as a group.

For the safety of his or her crew, it's imperative that a crew leader be able to coordinate any such deployment in the fastest, most organized way possible to minimize the potential for burns and/or loss of life during a turnover.
